To people who act in this spirit, the public anywhere, but especially in England and British Colonies, is remarkably long suffering; and it is worth the while Challenger, he having previously joined H. (N. C. Daily News.) We hear it stated on pretty good authority Ithough in an entirely unofficial way, that the Chinese Government have glately given indications of their willingness to dredge the Woosung Bar. It is not improbable that the recen diplomatic conjuncture at the capital has led to he settlement of this question also, but we give the report with some reserve—it is almost too good to be true. The difficulty which now presents itself to the official mind, among conflicting professional, and we may add nonprofessional, opinious, is what amount of risk and consequent responsibility is involved in the nudertaking. The weight of professional as well as public opinion has always been in favour of dredging, however; and if once the question escapes from the fetters of red tape, other obstacles will, let us hope, be got over with less

They kill a man much as they would out down a blade of grass, and eat him as they would a sheep or a pig. I have heard they do not employ fire, but swallow their food uncooked, thus constituting themselves savages in the had accompanied H. E. Okubo, as counsel on eye of the law. But of those families which three generations ago were not in the habit of using fire, at least one half have become like ourselves : and even such as have not been tamed, have yet very much modified their customs. For although these savages live in remote places, it must not be argued that they are of the lowest order of intellect and incapable of civilization : such as live near the Shekwans (tame savages) evince a desire for the civilization which China offers, while those farther away have not yet undergone much change in consequence of adherence to their own customs. If the opportunity is not seized to bring these within the pule of civilization, in onse of further massacreing and eating ship wrecked men of other nations, there will be a precedent for such money compensation as has lately been given to the Lewchewans; and when foreign nations try to hold regular students was granted by the Council of China to this procedent, it is to be feared that war will again be threatened. Therefore, I sny that this savage country should be divided nto districts schools established taxes collected: est and enlightened officials be sent to rule over them, an officer of instruction to teach them the classics etc., thus gradually winning them over to humanity and righteonsness. The nature of the savage, though bratish, is capable of outtivation and will yield to treatment: a complete, and not merely a superficial change, is possible. The Sekhwans are nothing more than is obvious that their time and patience bad savages who have thus yielded to the force of education. The suvages are what they are only because they have never been taught better. Administrative and educational measures adopted with wisdom would benefit us otherwise than by scenting their allegiance; and if the Sek hwans were amenable to civilization, it is but reasonable to suppose that the savages would be so too. Our soldiers at present in Formosa cannot number less than ten thousand men, and when the Japanese bave gone we can set to work, couploying force if the savages won't counted among regular chasses of the college. yield to gentle measures, and not desisting until our object is effected. Moreover, I have China for its action in the matter, which feeling would considerably facilitate this plan; and the whole of Formosa might come to be included in the most restricted meaning of the term 'Middle Kingdom,' the distinction also between savages and Sekhwans passing away altogether. The expense would be great, but not more than we have now lost by the indemnity. Further, in Formosa there are three hurvests a year, and I suppose it is tha same in the savage country. THE MOTHER COUNTRY AND THE At the meeting of the Social Science Congress at Glasgow, Mr. E. Chadwick read a long paper on the above subject :-"I have heard from a former Chief Secretary of the Colonial Office, and from others in bigh position, avowals that the policy on which they were disposed to not was a policy of weaning our Colonies from the mother country. I have heard such avowals with regret, but, as a political economist, without surprise, and Indvert -to the avowals as illustrative of the great question, propounded by the noble earl our prosident, of the necessity of technical education for statesmanship, especially of education in the elementary principles of political economy, until recently ontirely omitted in superior education; for to one conversant with the economy of the subject this policy of wearing the Colonies would be found to mean weaping us from the greatest means of progress in arts, arts, manufactures, and commerce: weaning us from powerful conditions of demand for production, for labour, and for the increase of wages; wouning us from the best means of relief from congested labour markets; weaning us from means of augmenting revenue; weaning also the Colonies from the most extended markets of the Empire, the cheapest means for their national defence, and for their economical and social, as well as for their political progress. If coonomical considerations be regarded, separation from the mother country would be found by the Dominion to be separation from a large future of commercial profit and interest, apart from the severance of sympathies and moral and political interests, which have a distinct value. Muterial or economical interests, will eventually rule over political interest, and the leading question I now submit is, what are the means requisite to strengthen our great intercolonial and, as respects India, our interdependency good will? In the time of Adam Smith steam may be said to have been unapplied. There were no railways, nor steamships, nor postal telegraphs, nor had our earlier political economists before them the the production and distribution of cheap and quick means of transit of produce and of The result of that struggle was too decisive to great facts displaying the vast importance of persons, and of the creation of international interests. The combined result of speeding the transit of goods and persons has been to bring Iudia, in time, as near to England as Constantinople was at the beginning of the present century, or as Rome was at the beginning of the last century; but the rule of engineering and mechanical science will, it is promised, further reduce the time by one-half. The effect of speeding the transit of goods by the working of the Suez Canal, and of the telegraph in speeding transactions, has been a four-fold turnover as compared with the transit round the Cape. Every stimulus should be immediately and cornestly applied to restore and activate our commerce, and most powerful stimuli, especially chesp ocean telegraphy, to bring retail business and extended branches required to bring in new islands. The Earl of Rosebery, President of the Association, regretted the small attendance in the ON LONDON.-Section, and said it was owing to the indifference, typified by the scanty attendance, that they required to discuss such questions, because the want of a closer connexion between Great Britain and her Colonies was due more to the absolute want of interest on the subject of the Colonies which prevailed in England than to On Bombay.—Bank, on demand 222 any other cause. That might perhaps be a judicious observation so far as it went, but Canada did not want to go. (Hear.) Moreover, such a proposal was hardly dignified on our part or complimentary to the Canadians. We did not seem to have shown the least arxiety that our emigrants, many thousands in number. should keep under our own flag instead of going to foreign and possibly hostile lands. The first question to consider was whether we could promote a more real and general interest in our greater than many people seemed to think bonours and distinctions were more freely conferred on Colonial and Indian subjects, but in order to do this they would have to assimilate Colonial to English society. There was no aristocracy in the Colonies, and they could not make a real aristocracy. It was not a thing which the Social Science Congress could send out in a bandbox to any part of the country. THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT. The Review has the following upon the rapid growth of German power :- The recent development of German power is perhaps one of the most noteworthy incidents of the time, and it appears to be fraught with momentous consequences. Suppose we go back for a quarter of a century—say to 1.48. Germany was then divided; revoluntary cries were heard even in the streets of Berlin. The Frankfort attempt at Federal union signally collapsed. Men shrugged their shoulders and said, "Germany will never have any political power. The Germans are olever merchants and ripe scholars, but that is all." Twenty years ago there was the Crimean War. In that fierce struggle Germany refused to take any part. Of course she was abused as neutral Powers always are abused. Some said that she would not join the Western Powers because she hoped to make money by her neutral attitude; others, that her army was not in a condition to undertake a campaign. No one knew, that even at that time the Prussian army was slowly but surely being made the best disciplined army in Europe. The influence of the Emporer William was felt before he came to the Throne. The next event was the war with Denmark. That happened only twelve years ago. The effect of that war was to further confirm the opinion of Europe as to the inherent weakness of Germany. That the Dance should succumb to the allied forces of Prussia and Austria was a foregone conclusion, but people made game of the reput-ed discipline of the Prossian forces, and of the success of the needle gun. If the French nation had had the least thought of the growing power of Germany the whole power of France would have been exercised for the defence of Denmark. Then came the war of 1856. It was short, sharp, and decisive. The victory of Sadowa effected great changes in the map of Europe. Austria was driven out of Italy, and ceased tobes German Power. Prussia. became the dominant power in Germany, and the centre of unity. Still, there was a general . disbelief in the prowess of Germany. The success was due to the mistakes of Austria, to LADIES AND CHILDREN'S OUTFITTERS. the intrigues of Bismarck, and to luck. Four permit any further doubt as to the strength of he German army. It was necessarily admitted that Germany was the first military Power on the continent. But the crowning triumph of Sedan was the outcome of long years of arduous preparation. Germany is now preparing a fleet, and people pretend to be alarmed at what they presume to be the ambitious designs of Germany. Will she not domineer in Denmark? Will she not be potent in Spain ? When she has a Comprising the Latest NOVELTIES in each powerful fleet will there be a limit to her ambition P These speculations are ridiculous. Germany bas no desire, whatever for an undue extension of territory. Being the most powerful Government on the Continent, the German Government must necessarily make its influence felt throughout Europe. There is, we think, no doubt that Germany will do more than hold her own, Her power will increase, and we most heartily rejoice in the prospect; for Germany is moral and religious Power. "She is the champion of true civil and religious liberty; she is the stont opponent of the Ultramontane Germany will be now and always fast friends. When we consider the present situation it is ! impossible not to recognise the controlling influence of Providence. But for the wonderful and rapid development of the power of Germany the Ultramontane league would have been a terrible scourge. On an average there are 769 marriages per
